The client wished for a fine-dine restaurant that elevates the dining experience with an interesting ambiance; the outcome is a fresh take on Indian design, incorporating contemporary and traditional elements and textures. The design intent is to deliver the right experience to any place, blending dwelling/city/linguistic elements. It's a team of design language, furniture and accessories for pre the client's brief; the allure of this restaurant has been done in a way that requires very basic maintenance.

A subtle and muted colour and material palette was chosen for a soothing and pleasurable dining experience. The layout also allows seating along the north façade, the opulent skylight and clerestory at different soaring experience. The entrance happens to be an interesting pause point for all the diners; along those lines, it is amazing too. The interior design language starts from the outside itself, where arched green paint finishes and detailed with intricate elements.

The ceiling treatment starts from this point, and travels further into the dining area to show a continuity of the space. It is done in a combination of mechanical wood and mirror. Entering in, the reception-a breath-taking enclave with a fluted-glass partition which diffuses the vision; yet makes it look big.
